

JESUS COLLEGE: SAY NO TO SUZANO

In 2024, Jesus College entered into a long term partnership with Suzano, a huge multinational paper and wood pulp corporation based in Brazil. They accepted an initial donation of £10,000,000 to fund "education and research into areas including the conservation of biodiversity, enhancing business sustainability and the restoration of natural habitats".

The reality faced by people living in the Amazon (where Suzano operates) is starkly different. For years, Suzano has been planting monoculture eucalyptus on rainforest land illegally grabbed from now displaced indigenous people. Local groups report frequent instances of intimidation, violence, and dumping of poison on land used by locals for agriculture. Suzano's partnership with Jesus College in the name of 'sustainability' gives it a chance to wash its hands of these sins and claim that it is on the side of people and planet.

WELL THAT SUCKS! IS ANYONE DOING ANYTHING ABOUT IT?

MST (the Landless Workers Alliance) has been organising direct action against Suzano for years, and reports that there has been no change to Suzano's 'business as usual' destructive practices in recent years.

SO WHAT CAN YOU DO?

Join us in demanding that Jesus College and the University of Cambridge recognise the immense harm Suzano continues to cause in the name of profit, and to abandon their greenwashing partnership in solidarity with Amazonian people and the planet.

BLOOD MONEY IN THE NAME OF 'SUSTAINABILITY' IS STILL BLOOD MONEY, SO ASK YOURSELF: "WHAT WOULD JESUS DO???"
